spate of Corona Virus wherein human beings occupy the habitations of other creatures for their own advantages.

Precisely, ecological imbalance is caused due to the unwarranted interference of human beings in the domains of other creatures. In fact, there is a strong cord between our survivals with the preservation of ecosystem.

Ecological disaster on account of soulless and inhuman interferences with nature is rising at an alarming rate these days. There is a strong link between the Medical fiasco posed by COVID-19 Pandemic and the annihilation of species and climate change. The rising decline of production base and the disproportion in land-plant-human-animal system is heading towards environmental imbalance and financial uncertainty.

Post lockdown period was indeed a boon for nature as it once again started to sprout. Vehicular emissions came down considerably. Manufacturing activities were stopped. Human interferences in nature have come down considerably. Due to considerable reduction in carbon emissions, air quality became healthier than ever before.

As the lockdown period continues to exceed the expected duration, the ozone layer too begins to improve substantially. All the species on earth too begin to enjoy their freedom to the full. It is indeed a unique phenomenon. It teaches us a great lesson that the earth is not meant for human beings alone, all the other creatures too are its beneficiaries. However, everything was momentary.

Again, our supremacy over all the living creatures including human beings are suspected today as we are rendered helpless to tame an intangible enemy. Further, in the whole process of material attainment human beings disremembered the fact that how insignificant is their role and stance in the vast universe. Even then, they outclassed in everything they fought to subdue the whole universe in their clutches.

However, today human beings are cornered within the four walls of their dwelling places paving the way for the other creatures to roam audaciously. How paradoxical it looks. Even the places of worship which once overcrowded with deities and believers look bluntly and may enjoy some sort of solace.

Some of these places are subdued by stray dogs and venomous snakes. Pessimism looms large in every walk of life. People have lost their earlier faith in the orthodox religious tenets, which in their opinion cease to deliver its desired objectives. Efforts are to be made to stop further erosion of moral and spiritual values, which once upon a time enabled us to keep our flock together.

However, this old philosophy may not assist us to convince our Pandemic stricken multitudes. We ought to have a paradigm shift in our approaches and attitudes in order to instill a strong urge among our citizens to overcome this crisis. People should denounce all sorts of superstitions and must embrace science and technology as their torch bearer for generations to come.

Change is the law of land and hence this transition is widely advocated. We are morally and spiritually obliged to do certain things to protect our humanity from further decay and devastation. Efforts are to be made to elevate the poverty stricken life of our youngsters to a decent and dignified life where no child will go to sleep without adequate nutritious food. When enough food is served to the underprivileged destitute, violence and crime on women will come down considerably resulting in the empowerment of women.

The main cause for all these anarchies in the community is related to illiteracy and so the illiterate people should be brought to the main stream of social life by imparting at least the basic education to them.

Another significant area is the eradication of economic disparity of the most vulnerable sections in the society. Without their economic empowerment, no society can ever prosper. The economic sector is the worst affected area because of the global economic slowdown and hence something substantial is to be done to avoid global economic disaster.

While announcing the special package for revamping the Indian economy, the Indian Prime Minister said; "I am announcing special economic package which will be key to making country self-reliant. This special package will amount to Rs.20 lakh crore which is nearly 10 percentage of India's GDP. It will have emphasis on land, labour, liquidity and laws".¹

One of the serious challenges before the entire world today is the job loss of trillions of skilled and efficient people. If the employment of people is not protected, the world will witness utter poverty leading to complete anarchy.

No country can feed its citizens by giving them free food and other essentials for a long time. Similarly, the benevolent people in the society can no longer distribute free food stuff and other essentials. These are all temporary arrangements to surpass the present fiasco. In spite of all these ordeals and hardships that we undergo, there is no respite for the citizens from the perils and dangers of the Pandemic COVID-19.

Corruption is rampant in every field. Unless and until corruption is uprooted from the surface of the earth, no country can ever prosper. Today, our secular values and principles are at stake. Secularism is replaced by fundamentalism and fanaticism. There is an urgent need to frustrate the nefarious attempts of anti-social elements from converting all our religious places into political power centres and financial capitals.

Instead, we must imbibe the virtues of respecting the teachings of each religion and inculcate the culture of disseminating the principles of moral and spiritual values among our citizens. It is not a utopian concept.

Another canker which eats up the tranquility and harmony of our people is the evil of human trafficking. Men and women are sold to flesh trade market and organ transplantation mafia for meager sum across the globe. The dignity and security of our people are at all-time stake.

A proper mechanism must be evolved to harness the perpetrators of these inhuman anti-national and anti-social elements from the society. Men and women who are very much into the evils of smoking, alcohol consumption; drug addiction, robbery and smuggling are roving scot-free today. The law enforcement authorities, barring a few genuine ones, in nexus with these anti-social elements, are plundering the country's wealth and prosperity. News items of human rights violations occupy prime spots in the national and international news bulletins. People should renounce unfair means to amass wealth.

The future of a country depends solely on the nature of the education system we do have and also the quality of education we do impart to its pupils. The system of education should have the credentials to make the students' fraternity responsible citizens. Efforts are to be made to put in place an affordable, improved and advanced medical system for all. Even the most powerful economic superpowers in the world realized their vulnerability to tackle this Pandemic for want of adequate and quality medical apparatus.

The standing of a country depends solely on the quality of its citizens. In this context the Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi said, "For a developing nation like ours with a large population the growing challenge of Corona Virus is not a normal situation. In such a time, only one mantra works- 'The world is healthy when we are healthy'".²

The European countries outclass us not merely because of their economic independence; it is mostly because of their refined, clean and hygienic posture. They do have an enviable etiquette, a character and culture which is worth assimilating. We may have to seek desperately to locate a location in any public office to stand, which is devoid of tobacco stains. Public spitting, whether it is in the public bus stand, hospitals, and trains and in all sorts of government offices, has become one of our inherent attributes.

Despite stringent laws in force, we failed to succeed in convincing our most revered citizens about the dangers of tobacco chewing and public spitting. In spite of conducting awareness programmes by the health workers and NGOs about the evil sides of tobacco chewing and spitting publically, there is no sign of any improvement in the attitude of people. This menace continues to rule our public places. With utter disrespect, disregard and callousness towards the safety of others, men and women alike, spit in public places adding more filth on the earth and risking the lives of other inhabitants on the earth. It has nothing to do with the kind of education one receives.

We may see people like politicians, literate and illiterate people, officers, beaurocrats, executives, professors, Doctors and lay-man become messengers of this social evil. The youngsters of the present generation love to inherit this unhygienic, anti-human, unbecoming and indecent culture and habit and they carry this activity to the coming generations too.

Tobacco-stained corridors, walls, meeting halls, reception areas, high tech offices, class rooms, court rooms, toilets and so on so forth pose serious health threats to everyone. Surprisingly, the custodians of these places are least moved or rather not annoyed by the ugly and unhygienic environment around them.

There is another side of this social evil. One cannot simply blame the consumers of tobacco-rich substances only. The culture of spitting in the public places is prevalent among people who are suffering from various deadly diseases like mouth ulcers, mouth cancer, tuberculosis, typhoid, tooth decay, fever, or such diseases. They are habituated in spitting in the public places causing health hazards to all.

Some offenders deposit their saliva and mucus in the folds of blankets in the air conditioned compartments of trains as welcome gift for the new travellers. There is a considerable reduction in the spitting phobia of people due to the use of face masks today. However, this trend may not last for a long period. Once the Pandemic begins to vanish; people will again resort to the same habit of spitting in the public places. Therefore, as civilized and erudite people we ought to imbibe the faculty of cleanliness as the integral part of our daily life.

Similar is the case of coughing in public with no respect for others' well-being. Many people seldom cover their mouth while coughing with a kerchief. The parents, teachers and elders of our families do have decisive roles to play in nurturing good habits among our children because good habits do not come as of its own, they have to be reared. Only through good family raising, good schooling and sensible growing, we can shape the lives of our children as responsible citizens.

It is my strong perception that this is the appropriate time to do our introspection. The Pandemic COVID-19 is in fact a clarion call for all of us to think about our views and priorities and correct the inaccuracies. The Prime Minister told, "Navratri Festival is coming in a few days. This is a festival of power worship. India will move forward with full strength, that is my only wish".³ Timelessness is a common phenomenon among all of us. Everybody is preoccupied with multiple engagements.

However, COVID-19 is certainly a blessing in disguise in respect of timelessness. Now we have ample time to think, interact and act. It is time to shrug off all sorts of vices like animosity, mistrustfulness, egotism, greediness, foul rivalries, communal and religious revulsion, caste splits and all pessimisms and let us have the Easter experience of new hope and salvation for all.

Let us learn to respect all the creations of God like the flora and fauna. Let us dream for an enhanced, tuneful, adoring, and considerate post Corona period soon.
